A: you need to grab the correct serial. The codes are changing so quickly. Thats not to say that someone can't be lucky and get the right code but your odds are low. You can use any visual software to browse these. I personally use VirtualDub. It is free and has a nice GUI and is easy to use. what you will need to do is browse through the registries until you find the right regkey. Looking at the keys is a PITA because of the fact that most of the keys are generated automatically. example: you search for regkey and you get 3 records. you click on the third record and you get another 3 (this is the oem key) you then search for the oem key to find the next one. the only time it stops automatically is when you are on the wrong key. Your best bet is to browse through the records until the program tells you that you are on the right key. good luck, it took me half a day to find the right code.
